COVID-19 Community History Project

Are you familiar with the folklore “March comes in like a lion and goes out like a lamb?” Historically and perhaps more accurately, the saying has been used in reference to weather predictions. Although with the harsh way daily life was altered in March 2020, it could be claimed that it felt as ferocious as a lion. The swift and abrupt regulations to aid in fighting/controlling the virus changed much of how we conduct our daily lives, from business to interactions with friends and family.

A key component of the Springfield Township Historical Society’s mission is to document the history of local individuals, families, businesses, organizations, and institutions. It was with that premise in mind that the COVID-19 Community History Project was developed.

In mid-March, in what is probably a similar story to many of you, the Society closed its doors, sent staff to work from home, wished everyone well to remain safe and healthy, and began to learn the interworking of virtual, well, everything. During one of the first virtual board meetings, the topic of how to document the changes being seen in the area was discussed. After this meeting, Board Members and the Archivist worked for weeks to create a cohesive study and collecting plan that would document how the pandemic affected the Springfield Township community on a personal level. The result became the COVID-19 Community History Documentation Project. The ongoing project incorporates a questionnaire to collect personal activities during the stay at home orders, a visual storytelling component which allows the community to share photographs in and around the Township, as well as an object and ephemera collection for items that were made in response to the pandemic. The goal of the project is to document residents’ experiences and create a repository of resources for future researchers.

Community Participation

We are extremely grateful to the community members who stepped up and shared their images and experiences. Until we are further along with the project, the images collected are not yet searchable in the collection on the Society’s website. However, the images can be viewed on the Society’s Facebook page, under #quarantinedinspringfieldtwpmontco. In addition to photographs, the Society received Township community and business emails, window signs, and school projects referring to various activities of the pandemic, as well as COVID-19 testing instructions. The full list of donations follows this article.

One of the largest components of this project outside of visually documenting the pandemic is the COVID-19 Community History Project Questionnaire. The questionnaire focuses on life during the stay-at-home orders for non-essential personnel which were in effect in Montgomery County from March 23 — June 5, 2020. The checkbox survey inquires about the changes that are occurring in our daily lives and asks simple questions about how we were spending our time at home.

When asked to sum up their new normal, participants overwhelmingly shared how they were enjoying having more time with those in their households through sharing meals and having a relaxed schedule, but they were also recognizing the increase of technology in their day-to-day lives. One participant summed it up as “Virtual Learning, Virtual Office, Virtual Hugs” and another by sharing their situation “2 adults (working) and 2 teens (school) at home all day has proved to be quite the experience with space and virtual settings” These statements along with others, makes it unsurprising that nearly every participant but one listed Zoom, the video conferencing software, as at least one option for how they’ve stayed connected with family and friends.

Several participants shared how social distancing was also taking its toll with missing milestone events, such as graduations, or not being able to hug a family member during a funeral service. One of the participants stated “How we interact socially has been altered for now, and into the foreseeable future.” Nearly three-quarters of participants expressed the thing they are missing most, and the thing they are most looking forward to once the stay-at-home orders were lifted was physically being with family and friends. “The thing I noticed most about this pandemic is how it has eroded the relational nature of being human” stated another participant.

Many remarked on the challenges of what were once simple daily tasks, such as going to the grocery store, have become something more complex. When the participants left home to do in-person shopping, the primary place they went was the grocery store. Almost all responders went shopping in person at Giant, and those who ordered online used Amazon Prime/Whole Foods. Other local businesses such as Acme, Captain Andy’s, and Oreland Hardware where named as well.

All but two people responding had ordered delivery or take out from our local restaurants. Mexican cuisine and pizza seemed to be the most popular, with El Limon mentioned 11 times and Oreland Pizza six! Many of the participants stated how much they are looking forward to being able to go to a restaurant again.

While varied, the responses showed that many people spent time outdoors. Whether it was for gardening and yard-work, walking/running, hiking or other exercises, all respondents shared that they spent time outside. One participart shared their excitement that they could grill while at home due to the nice weather.

There is Still Time to Participate

If you haven’t already done so, please consider filling out the questionnaire. While you are out in town or just walking down your residential street, please continue to take photographs. The COVID-19 Community History Documentation Project is an ongoing endeavor. While the stay-at-home orders may be over, we are still living through continually changing times. With your help, we can preserve and document these changes.

Also please note, that while the archives does not have public open hours, we are actively available and can assist you virtually or by appointment. Please feel free to contact us with questions regarding the COVID-19 Community History Documentation Project, if you would like to see the full results of the questionnaire to date, or any other research needs. We have assisted several community members with their questions. In addition, we are also accepting donations by contactless drop-offs by appointment, and have received several donations.
